2. THEORY Our theory draws on three key elements. The first is heterogeneous firms, as in Melitz (2003). The second is costly trade in intermediates, as in Kasahara and Lapham (2007). The third is imperfect factor markets that feature some form of rent sharing between firm and workers, as, e.g., in Helpman, Itskhoki and Redding (2010). 2.1.

We show that international trade increases the conflict of interest between CEO/owners and middle managers within firms and these eventually lead to decentralized corporate hierarchies. We test the theory with original data on the internal organizations of 2200 Austrian and German firms and find that the empirical evidence is consistent with the model's predictions.
